PREFACE

Father.Mungamuri Devadasu, to whom God graciously revealed "BIBLE MISSION" in 1938, authored this powerful booklet on the subject of Conscience. In it, he unveils deep spiritual insights into how the human conscience operates—how it speaks, convicts, and responds within every individual, regardless of circumstance. He boldly affirms that no one can escape the undeniable voice of their conscience, for it is indeed the voice of God within.

Being created in the image of God, mankind was entrusted with this divine voice—planted within the heart—to guide us in His ways, to restrain us from evil, and to keep us abiding in His love and care. When our conscience is cleansed and aligned with His Spirit, it becomes a sacred channel through which we not only live righteously but also commune with our Creator and prepare to dwell with Him eternally.

Father.M.Devadasu, led by the Holy Spirit, wrote many such books and delivered countless Spirit-inspired sermons. Those who read his writings and hear his messages can personally testify to the anointing and truth they carry. We are grateful to God for the privilege of publishing this booklet, and we believe it will continue to bless and transform lives.

May the Triune God be glorified through every word in this book!

In His service,

Servant of Gracious God,
Pastor. Vinny

The Voice of God

Beloved in Christ, May the grace, peace, and anointing of our Lord Jesus Christ overflow in your life as you wait eagerly for His glorious return. Amen.

Maranatha — Come, Lord Jesus!

In the beginning, when God created man, He placed a great instrument within the human body. Can you guess what that instrument is? It exists within you, within me, and within everyone. Just as God formed the human body with limbs like hands and feet, He also placed this instrument within us. Though everyone knows of this instrument, you may not immediately recall its name. Think about it! A train has a whistle, and we can hear its sound. A grain mill has a whistle, and we can hear that too. Similarly, the instrument that God placed in man has a powerful voice, yet it cannot be heard. Even those nearby cannot hear it. Only the person himself can hear it. There exists an instrument to proclaim the Good News, and its voice is strong enough to be heard from half a mile away. However, the instrument that God placed in man is even louder, yet its sound remains unheard by others.

The instrument that God placed within man is also one that teaches. From the moment of birth, this instrument exists within you, within me, and within everyone. Can you now guess its name? Or shall we tell you?

This instrument within man has two important functions:

1. To instruct: "This is a good deed—do it."
2. To warn: "This is not good—avoid it."

Are these not the greatest responsibilities? Throughout life, these are the two most essential things a person must understand—what is good and what is bad. If one recognizes what is bad, they can choose to abandon it, and thus, avoid harm. If one recognizes what is good, they can choose to embrace it, leading to well-being. Both avoiding harm and achieving good come from this very instrument that God has placed within us. It is through this instrument that these two essential duties are fulfilled.

Oh! How Gracious is God!

God, in His infinite wisdom, placed an instrument within us to distinguish between good and evil. Without it, how would we recognize right from wrong? How would we know how to live, how to walk the right path, or how to prosper? If we couldn’t tell good from evil, where would we go? Right might seem wrong, and wrong might seem right. But there is no need to fear, for God has given us this guiding instrument.

Now, can you name it? This instrument exists in both the righteous and the wicked, in those who listen and those who do not. Whether one likes what we preach or not, they will still hear it. The voice of this God-given instrument is unavoidable—it speaks whether we desire it or not. Therefore, we must bow before God, fall to our knees, and worship Him with gratitude. We admire and wonder at the mechanical marvels of the world, but have we ever marveled at this instrument within us? The wise may already know its name, and even children might recognize it.

What is this instrument called? If not by name, let us at least give it a title. The elders have named it "The Voice of God." What an honorable title! Our message calls it "Maranatha." The instrument placed by God is rightly called "The Voice of God." This name is fitting, for when we speak using a megaphone, the words spoken are still our words. Likewise, the words spoken by this instrument within us are the words of God. That is why it is called "The Voice of God" or "The Sound of God."

Yet, this instrument has another name. Since its purpose is to distinguish between good and evil, it would be best to call it "The Judge of Right and Wrong." This is the name we must give it. Now, take a moment and search your heart—do you have this instrument within you? Of course, you do! It is a gift from God, and we must use it wisely. It is given freely, entrusted to us as a divine inheritance. Whether we use it or not, God has already bestowed it upon us.

What should we do with it? If we listen to its voice, we will be blessed. If we ignore it, we will perish. This instrument remains within us throughout our lives, and even after death, it follows us wherever we go. It is our eternal companion, a priceless treasure given by God.

Can God take back what He has freely given? No, He will not. It is our birthright—use it well! Listen to its voice and follow its guidance, and you will be blessed. May divine grace be upon you! May God’s blessings be with you always! You may wonder—after such a long message, has the name of this instrument still not been revealed?

Well, here it is: "Conscience."

Conscience dwells within the human heart. The word itself means "witness"—for it bears witness to the truth within us.

A Story: The Voice Within

There was once a young boy. One day, he entered a mango orchard. He looked around cautiously, making sure no one was watching. Then, he plucked four raw mangoes, tucked them into his lap, and started running away. As he ran, he kept glancing back. Why was he so nervous? Because he knew what he was doing was wrong.

Deep inside, his conscience was scolding him:
"Boy! What you are doing is not right!"

In fact, his conscience had warned him even before he left home.
"You are going to steal mangoes. That is not a good thing!" it had said.

But did he listen? No. Ignoring the voice within, he boldly walked toward the orchard.

When he reached the trees, his conscience grew louder:
"I told you not to come! This is wrong! Turn back and go home!"

Did he turn back? No! He climbed the tree.

Once again, his conscience protested:
"Stop! Don't do it!"

Did he stop? No! He began plucking the mangoes.

"No, no, no!"—his conscience fought harder than ever.

But the boy did not stop. He climbed down, holding the stolen mangoes, and hurried away.

Did his conscience stop warning him? No. Did the boy stop stealing? No.

Now, how should this story end?

There is only one true ending: The story ends only when the boy stops stealing. The moment he decides to listen to his conscience, the story finds its resolution.

For as long as wrongdoing continues, conscience will never be silent. The end of wrong actions is the true end of the story.

The Divine Voice Within

Consider this: whenever conscience rebukes a person, their heart races. That very heartbeat is proof that conscience exists within them. Without conscience, the heart would not react at all. Oh! How great is the work of conscience! Whether or not it succeeds in stopping wrongdoing, its role remains invaluable.

What a noble task it is to remind us:
"What you are doing is wrong. You may think no one is watching, but the One who gave you this conscience is always watching. Even in the darkest night, even in secrecy—He sees everything."

This is no ordinary task—it is a divine task, a sacred responsibility. Should we not honor such a guide? Should we not respect and cherish it? The rebuke of conscience is not an ordinary reprimand—it is a saving warning, a protective shield, a force that pulls us back from wrongdoing.

Think of what conscience does:

- It makes the heart pound in fear.

- It causes the legs to tremble.
- It disturbs the mind, making it restless.
- It follows the wrongdoer relentlessly.
- It holds them back from stepping further into evil.

Is this not an extraordinary gift? Is conscience not our greatest helper? Should we not recognize its value and honor its guidance?

Earlier, we saw that God is the greatest benefactor because He has placed this conscience within us. Now, we realize that conscience itself is also a great benefactor. God is the King; conscience is His messenger. The King sits in the eternal heavens, and His messenger stands guard within us, warning and guiding us.

Oh, dear brothers and sisters! Let us fold our hands in humility and bow before the Divine, saying:
"O Lord, O King! You have placed such a noble guardian within me—how merciful You are! You have given me a faithful guide to turn me away from the wrong path. For this, I offer You my endless gratitude!"

If we honor the messenger, how much more should we honor the King who sent him?

" Father! How deep is Your compassion! You have placed within me a guardian, a royal servant, who redirects me from the path of destruction. What a gift! Countless praises to You!"

The Second Story

There was a girl who entered a guava orchard. As soon as she stepped in, her conscience warned her, saying, "Stealing is wrong, dear child!" But she ignored the voice and continued walking toward a tree.

As she prepared to climb, adjusting her clothes, her conscience called out again, "Don't climb! Don't climb!" Her heart started pounding with fear. She did not realize that it was God who had placed this inner voice within her. Yet, despite not fully understanding, she heard it. At that moment, she chose to turn back. Without taking a single fruit, she left for home.

Do you see? This girl listened to her conscience. But in the first story, the boy did not—he plucked the fruits and was caught and beaten by the orchard owner. Since he ignored his conscience, he suffered the consequences.

Those who refuse to listen to their conscience face punishment—not only in this life but also in the afterlife, where eternal suffering awaits.

However, punishment often begins in this very world. The girl, by heeding her conscience, was spared from it.

These two stories reflect the choices all humans make—your story and mine. There are those who listen to their conscience and those who do not. There are stories of regret and stories of redemption.

Which story will be yours? Will it be like the boy’s or the girl’s?

Dear friends, these lessons are not new. While the words may be fresh, the truth remains unchanged.

A Test of Conscience

This is a true story. A servant worked in the house of a high-ranking officer. He was diligent and trustworthy in his master's eyes. But one day, temptation came his way. The officer had forgotten a bundle of 200 rupees in his office room and went upstairs. The servant noticed this. Since it was nighttime, it was his responsibility to lock up the bungalow before leaving. As he was about to do so, a thought crossed his mind —"Why not take the money?"

Just then, his conscience spoke: "No! It is wrong! That money is not yours. You will get into trouble. God sees everything and knows your thoughts." But the servant ignored the warning. He stole the money, took it home, and hid it in a box.

He bathed, ate, and went about his chores as usual. But something strange happened—his conscience refused to be silent. The same voice echoed in his mind. It spoke when he locked the doors, followed him on the road, whispered as he hid the money, as he bathed, and even as he ate. He tried to harden his heart. He thought he had silenced his conscience, but he hadn't. That inner voice grew louder, tormenting him, robbing him of peace. Though he had taken the money, he could not sleep. The world was quiet, but his conscience screamed louder than ever.

Then, another conflict arose within him—two voices arguing inside his mind.

One voice urged him: "Return the money. Confess your mistake before the officer accuses you. If he suspects you, you will be caught. The sooner you confess, the better."

But another voice opposed: "Why confess? Why return the money? If you admit it, you will bring disgrace upon yourself. The officer won’t just punish you for this theft—he may accuse you of other past crimes too! No one saw you take the money. Stay quiet, forget about it, and sleep peacefully." The servant was torn between these voices, unable to decide.

This is the battle every human faces—the battle between good and evil, between conscience and temptation. One voice is from God, guiding us toward righteousness. The other is from Satan, leading us toward destruction.

Which voice should we listen to? The choice is ours.

The Two Voices Within

Dear brothers, examine yourselves—are these two voices present within you or not? They exist in every person. Can a human be born without knowing right from wrong? Certainly not! Yet, even when we recognize what is right, we often fail to do it. That is where the real struggle lies. In the end, a person either becomes righteous or turns away, ignoring the voice of conscience. God created man to be good, but over time, he drifted into wrongdoing. When did this fall begin? Why does evil persist within us today? The story of man's fall is well known to us. So, let us turn to the story at hand.

The servant, after a restless night, woke up in the morning, took the stolen money, and went straight to the officer. With deep remorse, he confessed his wrongdoing and begged for forgiveness. The officer asked him why he had chosen to return the money.

Then, the servant revealed the struggle that had tormented him all night. He said, "Sir, as I lay down last night, two voices fought within me, robbing me of my sleep. One urged me, 'Return the money,' over and over again. The other warned, 'If you confess, you will bring trouble upon yourself.' Their battle continued until morning. Finally, I chose to listen to the first voice and return what was not mine. Now, at last, my heart is at peace."

Remember this extraordinary story. Every person will face this inner conflict at some point in life. When that moment comes, recall this tale of the two voices. Choose the path of righteousness, and peace will follow.

With this, much has been said about conscience. Let us take this lesson to heart.

The Danger of Ignoring Conscience

Listen to another truth: When we see someone walking the wrong path, we try to guide them—"Don't do this, it is wrong." But no matter how much we advise, they refuse to listen. Eventually, what do we do? We stop trying. That person will continue in their ways and bring misfortune upon themselves. The same happens with our conscience. At first, it warns us again and again. But if we keep ignoring it, one day, it stops speaking. At that point, a person feels free to act however they wish, thinking they have no accountability. Right and wrong become meaningless. They are like a drunkard who cannot tell if they are standing or falling. No matter what others say, they refuse to listen.

Just as people give up advising a stubborn man, conscience too will fall silent. This is a dangerous state—may none of us ever reach it!

Let us train ourselves to listen to our conscience. At first, it may be difficult, but once we develop the habit, following its voice becomes easy.

Purifying the Conscience

By my understanding, it has been nearly six thousand years since the first human fell into sin. In the beginning, man was pure, for God, being holy, created him in holiness. But over time, as man turned away from God's word, he became sinful. Ignoring God's word is what makes a person sinful.Yet, God placed conscience within man so that, even in His silence, people could still discern right from wrong. If every person in the world were to share their experiences with conscience, it would become an endless story. Therefore, one must learn to heed the voice of conscience.

But here arises a challenge—before sin entered the world, conscience was pure. After sin, however, it became corrupt. As a result, conscience no longer distinguishes right from wrong as clearly as before. That is why it must first be purified before it can be trusted.

How can we purify our conscience?

Think of a drum that once produced a clear, strong sound. If neglected, it develops holes and no longer sounds right. Is the problem with the drum itself? No, it has simply worn out. Likewise, our conscience today is not as perfect as it was when God first placed it within us—it has become tainted. Thus, it must be restored.

The only way to repair our conscience is to go to its Creator—God Himself. Just as a damaged drum must be taken to a skilled craftsman for repair, a polluted conscience must be taken to God for cleansing.

How Do We Approach God?

Some may ask, "God is in heaven, far away. How can we reach Him?" But He is not far. He is near to all who seek Him with sincerity.

Go into a quiet place, close the door, and believe that God is with you. Kneel down, pray from the heart, and seek His help. When you do this with faith, your conscience will be cleansed, and you will once again hear its voice clearly.

A Prayer for a Cleansed Conscience

What should one pray to God?

"O God, Father who created everything! My Creator and the One who formed my conscience! I bow before You with gratitude. Because I ignored the voice of the conscience You gave me, it has become corrupted. Now, I bring it back to You for restoration. Please cleanse and renew it. Let my conscience no longer speak falsehoods but only the truths You command. Restore it to its original purity so that it may guide me rightly."

Pray in this manner, and you will see—your conscience will begin to speak as God intended. It will clearly distinguish good from evil, guiding you toward righteousness. If you listen to its voice, you will be truly blessed. In this world, many voices are heard—some teaching goodness, others leading astray. But if your conscience is purified and aligned with God's truth, you will always know the right path. Listen to it, follow it, and your life will be filled with wisdom and peace. Whenever an event occurs, people interpret it in different ways. One person may describe it one way, while another sees it differently. This raises the question: What should we believe? What is the truth? How can we discern reality?

God has given us wisdom to distinguish between good and bad. What seems inappropriate to one person may appear completely unacceptable to another. In such cases, determining the absolute truth becomes challenging, and convincing others can be even harder. The world is home to many religions. Some claim their faith is the only true one, while others insist theirs is correct. Some even argue that all religions are one and the same. With so many conflicting beliefs, how do we find the truth? People hold debates, publish books, and present arguments to support their perspectives. But how can we be certain which is right?

Religious conflicts are increasing in today's world, making peace seem elusive. The only true solution is prayer. Through sincere prayer, we can seek divine guidance. Our hope is that everyone embraces this path. To truly seek the truth, one must set aside personal biases and approach God with an open heart. Otherwise, preconceived notions will cloud the mind, even in prayer, which only leads to further confusion.

May God's grace be with you! May the Almighty, the source of all truth, reveal His truth to you!

When an incident occurs in a place and spreads among a crowd, people recount it in various ways after dispersing. Their own interpretations and imaginations become part of the story, making it difficult to uncover the actual truth. However, if the person who witnessed the event immediately writes it down, prints it, and distributes it to everyone, the truth becomes clear. Unlike spoken words, written records cannot be altered as easily. If someone attempts to modify the written account, the fabrication will be evident.

Here's a simple activity to understand this concept:

1. Take a piece of paper and write a short story neatly.
2. Read the story aloud to a small group of people.
3. The first person should then retell the story to the second person.
4. The second person should pass it on to the third, and so on.
5. Repeat this process for ten people over ten days.
6. Finally, ask the tenth person to write down the story as they remember it.

Compare the final version with the original. You will see how much the story has changed along the way, proving how spoken words can be distorted over time, while a written record preserves the truth.

Compare what you originally wrote with what the last person wrote. You will notice significant differences in the story. Why did these changes occur? Because the story was passed on through spoken words, and as it was retold, it changed.

The reason for explaining this is that God continually speaks to the conscience within every person. If our conscience remains pure, God's words will always remain unchanged. However, when a person's conscience becomes corrupted, they unknowingly alter God's words, mixing them with their own interpretations and imaginations.

In ancient times, God appeared to His faithful followers and revealed His words to them, instructing them to record them in books. Had these words not been written down, they would have been passed orally from person to person, eventually leading to distortion. That is why God ensured His words were documented. By reading these scriptures, we can understand His true message. Otherwise, what God originally said, what the conscience perceives, and what humans interpret may all differ.

To illustrate this point, let me share an example.

I once asked a deaf man to bring a blanket, but he brought a pot instead. Was my instruction wrong, or was his hearing at fault? I clearly said "blanket," but he misheard it as "pot." The mistake was in his hearing, not in my words.

Similarly, when God speaks to humanity, His message remains true, but people perceive it differently. This is because human nature has become corrupted over time. Just as the deaf man needs to visit a hospital to restore his hearing, a person must seek God to cleanse their conscience. Only then will they be able to hear and understand His words correctly.

As I have said before, one must go to God in prayer and continue praying until peace and clarity are received. However, many people are too lazy to do this, choosing instead to live with a distorted conscience. Let them be. But how long can they continue this way?

The need for prayer arises when one truly desires to know the truth. When will that moment come? It happens when you begin to question: Is what I believe really true? This question arises when you hear teachings that differ from what you were taught.

When that moment comes, take that question to God in prayer. Lay it before Him and seek His guidance, for only He can reveal the truth. God does not reveal everything to humanity at once. When the first human was created, He made certain things known. After a few hundred years, He revealed more, and as time passed, He continued to make new truths known. This is how God gradually unveils knowledge, revealing it to those He chooses—both to elders and even to children. When God discloses new truths in one generation, will the next generation accept them? Some will believe, while others will reject them. This pattern has existed throughout history—there have always been believers and skeptics in every generation.

So, what should we do? We must examine whether new things exist in our time that were not present in our ancestors' time. Weren’t there no buses in the past, but now they exist? New knowledge is being revealed in religious matters, governance, and various professions. Just as we witness the emergence of airplanes and new technologies before our eyes, knowledge continues to evolve, and new discoveries are made.

How should we respond to these changes? Dismissing them outright would be foolish. Any new thing must be understood and used correctly; otherwise, it may cause harm. For example, electricity is a modern discovery, but if used improperly, it can be deadly. Likewise, all new revelations must be properly understood and accepted with wisdom.

Rejecting what God reveals is the same as rejecting God Himself.

I repeat what I have said before: To know the truth, God has given us a book—the Bible. It contains everything He wants humanity to understand. However, if one reads it with a distracted or careless mind, its meaning may seem unclear. Only with a sincere and purified heart can its true message be fully grasped.

Just as washing one's eyes brings clearer vision, purifying the conscience through prayer allows for a deeper understanding of the Bible. The Bible is the foundational scripture, preserving God's words in their purest form. Yet, true comprehension comes only when God Himself reveals their meaning. This happens when we sincerely ask, pray, and seek His guidance.

How should we seek understanding? Through humble prayer. One should kneel before God and say, "Father, You have given us this Bible. I thank You. As I read, reveal its meaning to me." Some verses may be clear, while others may not. Just as a student asks a teacher for help, we must ask God when we struggle to grasp His words.

With time, different generations have understood the scriptures in new ways. What one generation may not fully comprehend, another might. This process will continue until the end of time, as the Bible holds deeper truths waiting to be revealed.

A remarkable verse comes to mind: "You have hidden these things from the wise and learned, and revealed them to little children." (Matthew 11:25). How profound! God, in His wisdom, sometimes reveals truths not to scholars or the highly experienced but to the humble and open-hearted. Nothing is impossible for Him.

Some may say, "We are scholars, theologians, and lifelong servants. How can these ordinary people understand what we do not?" But those who receive the truth will simply point to Matthew 11:25 and say, "Didn't God already tell us this would happen?"

God has hidden certain truths from the wise and learned but has revealed them to the humble, like little children. The Bible unveils these truths, and I will summarize them here.

God first created the heavens and the earth for humanity. When man fell into sin, God promised to send a Savior. For 4,000 years, people longed for this Redeemer, and those who believed in His coming attained salvation. At the appointed time, God Himself took human form and was born as Jesus Christ. He became known throughout the world as the promised Savior.

Jesus bore the weight of humanity’s sins, was crucified, died, and rose again on the third day with a glorified body. He then ascended to heaven, promising to return. The Bible declares that when He comes again, He will take those who believe in Him into eternal life without experiencing death. This is the message we teach.

Through continuous study, reflection, and examination of the Bible, many more revelations unfold. We also teach these deeper truths. After Christ takes His followers to heaven, those left behind on earth will face unparalleled suffering for seven years. Following this period, Jesus will return to establish His righteous rule on earth. During His thousand-year reign, there will be no evil, sin, enemies, or harmful creatures to trouble mankind.

At that time, the full glory of Christ’s kingdom will be revealed. This will be God’s final offer of grace to humanity.

After that, from the beginning of creation until that time, Christ the Lord will raise the faithless from their graves and pass judgment on them. Ultimately, those who did not believe in Him will be condemned to hell—not just them, but also Satan and the demons who led people into sin. He will cast them into hell. However, He will forgive those who believe in Him and grant them salvation. These truths are written in the Bible.

This teaching began with a discussion about conscience, and now we have explained the entire matter. Can you say who ignores their conscience—the wicked or the righteous? Earlier, I said it was the wicked, didn’t I? But in the end, we must acknowledge that even the righteous often do not listen to their conscience. How so? Because everyone who reads the Bible claims to believe in God. Believers are considered righteous. But do they truly accept everything written in the Bible? No, they do not. Even when their conscience speaks to them, they refuse to believe. Why? Because they have decided: "Our elders never taught us these things, so we should not believe them." What can we say about such people? They are elders, they are knowledgeable—what can we do? Still, regardless of who they are—whether they know the truth or not, whether they are good or bad, young or old, men or women, those who have heard before, followers of any religion, and our fellow Christians—we are proclaiming these new revelations. That is, we are bringing to light truths freshly revealed from the Bible.

Because of this, we have been given many bad names. These criticisms have become like a garland around our necks. But will we stop preaching the truth just because we are ridiculed? Can we withhold the things that God has revealed to our conscience? Even if Christian preachers do not accept or explain these truths, can we remain silent? If we fail to proclaim them, would we not be guilty?

Should we question why God has not revealed these things to their conscience? We do not know.

Blessing: May the Divine God bless you!
May the Creator of the earth sustain you!
May Christ the Savior protect you!
May the Supreme Healer grant you health!
May the Holy Spirit bring you courage!
And in the end, may He grant you salvation!
Victory to those who hear this song!
